A neuter form (—O Teut type markōm*) exists in several Teut langs. with the senses 'sign', 'landmark', 'standard', etc. MDu. mark (mod Du. merk), MHG. mark (mod G. has marke fem., prob influenced by F. marque), ON., MSw. mark. The ME. form merke (disyllable), while normally representing the OAnglian pronunciation merc, may in part descend from ONorthumb. męrce (also written męrca), token, sign, and in part also from an adoption of the equivalent ON. merki neut., landmark, standard, sign (Sw. marke, Da. mærke) — OTeut. type markjōm*, f. markī* (see above), it may also, in northern dialects, represent partly the ONorthumb. gemęrce sign, token (= WS. gemierce, OHG. gimerchi boundary.—OTeut. ga-markjōm*), as the prefix ge- of sbs. did not survive into ME., and the palatalized c in final syllables became k in northern Eng. According to phonetic law the ME. merke regularly became mark in mod Eng., thus coalescing with the descendant of WS. mearc.

The Teut. word and its derivative vb were early adopted into Romanic; the sb. appears as OF. merc, marc masc., F. marque fem., mark, sign, etc., marche (ONF. marque) boundary (see MARCH sb.[3]), Pr., Sp., Pg., It. marca mark, sign, boundary. Some of the senses developed in F. marque have coloured the application of the Eng word.

The OTeut markī* appears to be cogn. w. L. margo MARGIN, OCeltic mrogi-* country (Gaulish brogi- in place-names, Welsh bro, OIrish mruig, bruig), Persian marz boundary. The extra-Teut relations confirm the view which is suggested by the evidence of Teut. itself, that the primitive sense is 'boundary'. The order of development of senses which appears most probable, and is assumed as the basis of the arrangement below, is 'boundary', 'sign of a boundary', 'sign in general', 'impression, trace or device used as a sign', 'impression, trace, etc. in general'. Some scholars, however, have considered the sense 'visible trace' as primitive (comparing Lith. margas parti-coloured), and have supposed the sense 'boundary' to be either derived from this or to belong to an independent word.]

2. Hist. The name applied in mediæval Germany to the tract of land held in common by a village community. Hence used by many modern scholars to denote the tract of land similarly held by one of the village communities of primitive Teutonic times. Also attrib, as in mark-community, -family, -system, markmoot (pseudo-arch.), a (supposed) assembly of the inhabitants of the 'mark'.

Kemble's fancy that OE mearc was the name of a unit of territorial organization next below the shire (scīr or gā) has no foundation. The alleged OE mearcmōt* 'mark-moot', has no existence: the mearcmōt occurring in a schedule of boundaries of land at Barrow-on-Humber in 971 (BIRCH C. S. No. 1270) may perh. mean 'parsley-bed', and in any case does not admit of Kemble's interpretation.

1848 KEMBLE Saxons in Eng. (1876) I. III. 84 Such a community occupies its own territory, its mark. Ibid. 98 The unit is the Mark, roughly represented by the modern parish or manor. 1874 STUBBS Const. Hist. (1875) I. II. 34 We have not the mark system. Ibid. V. 84 note, That the markmoot was a court of justice seems altogether improbable. Ibid. 85 It is as an owner of land, not as a member of the mark community, that the freeman has rights. 1876 DIGBY Real Prop. I. § 1. 5 Each community occupied a territory or mark, which was divided into three, or rather four portions. 1887 Edin. Rev. Jan. 10 In all Teutonic countries the same conflict was waged between the manor and the mark.

3. Used to represent G. Mark as the proper name of certain principalities, esp. the Mark of Brandenburg. †Also repr. It. Marca in the Mark of Ancona. (Cf. MARCH sb.[3] 3.)

Rom. marca (see MARCH sb.3, MARK sb.1) frontier, frontier territory + -ese·—L -ēnsem suffix forming adjs. from place-names (see -ESE) The word is thus etymologically an adj., the sb. understood being that represented in Eng by COUNT, so that the title was equivalent to MARGRAVE. The med.L. representative was marchiōnem (marchio), still preserved in heraldic Latin · cf marchioness.

The prevailing spelling in literary use appears to be marquis. Some newspapers, however, use marquess, and several English nobles bearing the title always write it in this way]

1. In various European countries, the title of the ruler of certain territories (originally 'marches' or frontier districts) This gradually passed, in Romanic-speaking countries, into a mere title indicating a certain grade of noble rank, immediately below that of duke and above that of count In English it is commonly used to designate a person of this titular rank in the modern nobility of foreign countries (though the foreign forms, It. marchese, Sp marqués, etc. are sometimes retained), and also Hist. as the appellation of those territorial lords to whom it was applied in earlier times. Formerly it was often employed (now rarely) as the English equivalent of MARGRAVE.

2. At the end of the 14th c the title was introduced into England to designate a specific degree of the peerage, between those of duke and earl. Late in the 15th c this degree was adopted in the peerage of Scotland. The title still continues, indicating the same relative rank, in the peerage of the United Kingdom and in those of Scotland and Ireland. When a duke is also a marquis, his second title is given 'by courtesy' to his eldest son thus the eldest son of the Duke of Devonshire is called 'the Marquis of Hartington'.

The title of a marquis is usually territorial in form, as 'the Marquis of Salisbury', but in some instances 'Marquis' is prefixed to a surname, as 'the Marquis Cornwallis'.

† 3. In the 16-17th c. often employed as a female title, equivalent to the later MARCHIONESS. Obs

It is not easy to see how far this was regarded as an application of the masculine title, and how far it was taken as an anglicization of MARQUISE The spelling marquess was commonly preferred in this use, prob. through association with the suffix -ESS. Lady was often prefixed

Martello (mārte·lo). [Corruption (through association with It. martello hammer) of the name of Cape Mortella in Corsica (from It. mortella wild myrtle), where there was a tower of this kind which the English fleet captured with some difficulty on 8 Feb. 1794, it had been captured by the English and again abandoned in Sept 1793

The tower was of a type common in the Mediterranean; the stout resistance which it was able to make with a small force led to a belief among English military experts that the construction had great defensive value, and the erection of 'martello' towers was therefore strongly urged on the British government, but it was not until 1804 that any were actually erected. Windham's account of the events of 1793–4 is grossly inaccurate, but there appears to be no room for doubt that he refers to these]

Martello tower (also, rarely, martello): a small circular fort with massive walls, containing vaulted rooms for the garrison, and having on the top a platform for one or two guns; usually erected on a coast to prevent the landing of enemies.

3 Martial law. a. That kind of military government of a country or district, by which the ordinary law is suspended, and the military authorities are empowered to arrest all suspected persons at their discretion, and to punish offenders without formal trial. † b. Formerly sometimes applied to what is now called 'military law', viz the body of enactments and rules for the government of the army; an enactment or rule forming part of this.

Originally these two senses (in which the adj has respectively senses 1 and 2) would not always be distinguishable, as military law existed only in war time, and consisted mainly of temporary and occasional ordinances; our earliest quots., however, distinctly exhibit the same use as is now current. In early examples the adj. is often assimilated in spelling to MARSHAL sb, and it was a common opinion that 'marshal law' was so called as being the law emanating from the lord marshal Mod Fr has loi martiale, but perh. from English

The name is applied in Fr to various birds, as in martin-chasseur, the hen-harrier, martin-pêcheur, the kingfisher; the dim martinet (see MARTINET) denotes the house-martin and the swift

The application of the Christian name to birds has no obvious reason, and may have been purely arbitrary Many writers of the 17th c say that the martin is so called because it comes in March and departs about Martinmas]

2 Her. An imaginary bird without feet, borne as a charge Used as a mark of cadency for a fourth son.

In French heraldry the corresponding bird (described as having neither feet nor beak) is called merlette (OF merlete, mesiete; AF heraldry had merelot, merlot, with differing dim. suffix) This word is app a dim of merle blackbird, according to Littré it has the sense 'female blackbird', but only the heraldic sense appears in Hatz.-Darm It seems possible that the heraldic bird may originally have been intended for a 'little blackbird', represented without feet by accident or caprice, or with symbolical intention, and that the English heralds of the 16th c or earlier identified the bird so depicted with the 'martlet' or swift, which has short legs, whence its mod specific name apus = Gr. ἄπους footless It is noteworthy that the 'martlets' (so called in the 16th c) in the pretended arms of Edward the Confessor were at an early period portrayed with feet. The anglicized form of merlete, Marlet, does not occur in heraldic use, but appears in several 16th c instances with the sense of martlet, i. e. a swift or a martin According to English heraldic writers, the use of the footless bird as a mark of cadency for younger sons was meant to symbolize their position as having no footing in the ancestral lands

1 Eccl The specific designation of honour (connoting the highest degree of saintship) for One who voluntarily undergoes the penalty of death for refusing to renounce the Christian faith or any article of it, for perseverance in any Christian virtue, or for obedience to any law or command of the Church.

A sect which regarded its distinctive principles as part of the Christian faith could apply the title, in this strict sense, to its own members who died under persecution, while by others the application would be repudiated, or only conceded ironically Popularly, however, this sense has long tended to be apprehended as a specific use of sense 2.

The Fr word (first recorded in 16th c) is usually believed to be ad. the synonymous Sp máscara, It maschera (see Masker sb[1], Masquerade). The ulterior etymology is obscure The evidence of Isidore tends to show that the form with c is original, and some scholars have suggested that the word is from the root of L măceria, wall On the other hand, the stem mattiōn- agrees with the OHG mezzo (also in comb steinmezzo, mod G steinmetz, stonemason) —prehistoric mattjon* This is commonly regarded as the source of the Rom word, but it has no affinities in Teut (unless it be cogn. w. The recorded forms in med L. are machio (7th c. in Isidore, who explains the word as a derivative of māchina machine), mazo (8th c in the Reichenau Glosses, c 1000 in Ælfric), macio, mattio, mactio, and (latinized from the Fr.) macho, maco

The ulterior etymology is obscure The evidence of Isidore tends to show that the form with c is original, and some scholars have suggested that the word is from the root of L mācerra, wall On the other hand, the stem mattiō- agrees with the OHG mezzo (also in comb steinmezzo, mod G steinmetz, stonemason) —prehistoric mattjon-* This is commonly regarded as the source of the Rom word, but it has no affinities in Teut (unless it be cogn w. OFris., OS. missa (MDu misse, messe, mod.Du. mis), MHG. misse, messe (mod G. messe), ON. messa (Sw. messa, Da messe)

It is now generally agreed that the L missa is a verbal sb (formed like repulsa, collecta, offensa) from L. mittĕre (pa. pple missus) to send, send away, dismiss The earliest known examples of the word belong to the last quarter of the 4th century, occurring in the Epistles of St. Ambrose and the Itinerary of Silvia of Aquitania In the early centuries it had the general sense of 'religious service', being applicable, e g, to matins and vespers, though in an eminent sense it always denoted the Eucharist. In secular application it occurs, though rarely, in the 5th and 6th centuries with the sense 'dismissal'. The origin of the liturgical application has been much disputed Isidore (a 636) conjectured that the original reference was to the dismissal of the catechumens which was the preliminary to the eucharistic service This explanation is not favoured by modern scholars, who consider that the wider sense 'religious service' is more likely than the narrower sense to have been the original Some think that missa at first denoted the solemn dismissory formula at the conclusion of a service, Ite, missa est, and hence came to be applied to the service itself. Others (as Kattenbusch in Herzog's Encycl) have suggested, on confessedly slender and doubtful evidence, that missa in secular use had some such sense as 'commission', 'official duty', and was therefore adopted as the rendering of Gr λειτουργία (see LITURGY), which had primarily a similar meaning, but in ecclesiastical language was used for 'religious service' and specifically for the Eucharist. Several other theories have been proposed, but none of them has gained wide acceptance among scholars]

1 The Eucharistic service; in post-Reformation use, chiefly that of the Roman Catholic Church.

In the 16th c the Protestants generally objected to the term as being unscriptural, and as associated with the

'popish' view of the nature of the sacrament (In Sweden and Denmark, however, the equivalent words are applied to the Lutheran communion service) In the first Prayer-book of Edward VI (1548-9) the heading of the service reads 'The Holy Communion, commonly called the Masse', but in the subsequent Prayer books the word was not used In recent years some of the Anglican clergy have applied the term to their own rite

IV. As a title of rank or compliment

20 Used vocatively as a term of respect or politeness. a sing. = Sir. Now only in uneducated use. b. pl. (in later times always my masters) = Sirs, gentlemen. Now arch. or rhetorical, chiefly in ironical or derisive context

In the first quot rendering L magister, prob applied to Nectanabus as being a man of learning

21 A title prefixed to the name or designation of a man Originally used only in speaking of or to a man either of high social rank or of learning (sometimes, esp in Scotland, applied spec to a Master of Arts), but gradually extended in application In ordinary use now only dial, but in literature sometimes arch or Hist; otherwise superseded by MR (pronounced mi'stəɹ).

The obscured pronunciation resulting from ploclitic use doubtless began while the written form master was still commonly employed Before the end of the 17th c the abbreviation Mr (originally only one among many others used for the word in all applications) had come to be restricted to the use in which the pronunciation was obscured, and to be the only permitted mode of writing the word in that use Henceforward master and Mr. were practically two words, distinct both in function and in form In this Dictionary the abbreviation MR, in all its historical varieties of use, will be treated in its alphabetical place.

a. Prefixed to a surname or a Christian name.

Down to the 16th c or a little later, master could be prefixed to the name of a knight or a bishop, at an earlier period it was freely used with the names of personages of ancient history and ancient writers. Some modern dialects have only one form for Master and Mr as prefixed titles, others have both prefixes with a difference of function, Mr being the superior title (See E D D)

Mathematics (mæþɪmæ tɪks), sb. pl. [pl of Mathematic B. 1 Cf. F. les mathématiques (fem.).

Gr had the neut pl τα μαθηματικα in the sense of mathematical objects, principles, facts, etc, as well as the fem ἡ μαθηματικη mathematical science, Mathematic B 1. The Fr and Eng use of the plural (known from the 16th c) seems to have originated as an elliptic expression for 'mathematic sciences', and to have had at first no connexion with the Gr. use of the neuter plural The analogy of names of sciences like physics, metaphysics (in which the pl form is of Gr origin) has, however, caused the sing to be in English entirely superseded by the plural, in Fr, which has not the plural form in the other instances, the sing. mathématique survives in use as well as the plural]

Originally, the collective name for geometry, arithmetic, and certain physical sciences (as astronomy and optics) involving geometrical reasoning. In modern use applied, (a) in a strict sense, to the abstract science which investigates deductively the conclusions implicit in the elementary conceptions of spatial and numerical relations, and which includes as its main divisions geometry, arithmetic, and algebra; and (b) in a wider sense, so as to include those branches of physical or other research which consist in the application of this abstract science to concrete data. When the word is used in its wider sense, the abstract science is distinguished as pure mathematics, and its concrete applications (e.g. in astronomy, various branches of physics, the theory of probabilities) as applied or mixed mathematics.

In early use always construed as a plural, and usually preceded by the. In recent use the is commonly omitted, and the sb is almost always construed as a sing, exc in (the) higher mathematics

The ceremony of washing the feet of poor persons on the day before Good Friday was instituted in commemoration of Christ's washing the apostles' feet at the Last Supper, and of his injunction that his disciples should in like manner wash one another's feet (John xiii 14). The words 'A new commandment (mandatum novum) give I unto you, that ye love one another' (ibid. 34) from the discourse which followed the washing of the apostles' feet, were adopted as the first antiphon sung at the commemorative observance, which hence acquired the name of mandatum (Hence OHG. mandāt, in Otfrid's paraphrase of John xiii 12–14). In later use, perh owing to the currency of dies mandati (lit 'day of the commandment') as a name for the day before Good Friday, mandatum frequently denoted the Last Supper itself]

1. The ceremony of washing the feet of a number of poor people, performed by royal or other eminent persons, or ecclesiastics, on the Thursday before Easter, and commonly followed by the distribution of clothing, food, or money. II. As an auxiliary of predication; with a following simple inf., or with ellipsis of this.

May shares with various other auxiliary vbs. (as can, will, shall) the characteristic that the inflected past subjunctive (though coinciding formally with the past indicative) retains its original functions. Like other past subjunctives, might is frequently used in a sense which differs from that of the present form not temporally but modally (partly corresponding to the 'present conditional' of Romanic grammar). The fact that might thus admits of three different meanings is sometimes productive of ambiguity, which has to be avoided by recourse to some different form of expression. Further, may agrees with certain other auxiliaries in having no pa. pple.; hence its pa. t. is used with a following perfect infinitive where logical correctness would require the plupf. tense (ind. or subj.) of the auxiliary followed by a present infinitive. Thus, in sense 3 below, he might do may be paraphrased either 'he was free to do' or 'he would be free to do', and he might have done=either 'he had been free to do' or 'he would have been free to do'.

¶ b. The pa. t. indicative in this sense (he might = 'he had opportunity to', 'it was possible for him to') is, exc. in actual or virtual obliqua oratio, now obsolete, on account of the tendency to interpret might as subjunctive. In poetry might was sometimes nearly equivalent to 'did'.

This use is strikingly characteristic of the style of Gibbon, as is also that explained under 5 c, it is often difficult to determine which of the two senses he intended.

8 As an auxiliary of the subjunctive mood.

a Since the desire for an end involves the desire for the possibility of the end, may in sense 3 in combination with an inf is used, in clauses involving the idea of purpose or contemplated result, to express virtually the same meaning as the subjunctive of the principal verb. Hence this combination has come to serve as a periphrastic subjunctive, which has in ordinary prose use superseded the simple subjunctive in final clauses.

(a) in final clauses introduced by that or lest; also occas. with ellipsis of that (e g after to the end)

b. In exclamatory expressions of wish, may with the inf is synonymous with the simple pres subj., which (exc poet and whet) it has superseded

The subject normally follows may, but examples are found in the older lang in which this is not so

Mayor (mēˑ ər, mēər) Forms. 3 mer, 3–7 (latterly Sc.) mair, 4 meire, 4–5 meir, meyr, 4–6 mayr, meyre, 4–7 maire, mayre, 5 maieur, mere, majer, maiere, meer, mar, mawer, 5–6 mayer, maier, meyer, 5–7 mare, 6–7 maio(u)r, 6–8 major, 6– mayor. [Early ME mair, mer, a F. maire (from 13th c).—L. mājor nom , properly adj , greater (see Major). OF. had also a form maor, meor —L mājōrem acc., which may be represented in some of the ME forms. The spelling maio(u)r, common in the 16th c., seems to be intended to represent the L. major, but as the i could be read as a vowel, this form became phonetically nearly coincident with those adopted from Fr. The substitution of y for i was in accordance with the orthographical habits of the 16–17th c., and need not be ascribed to imitation of the Sp. form mayor

The med L mājor as a title was adopted as OHG meiur, whence MHG meier, meiger, mod G. meier farm bailiff, farmer. Du meier has both senses, 'mayor' and 'farmer']

1. The head or chief officer of the municipal corporation of a city or borough.

The title is used in England and Ireland (see also Lord Mayor), in the British Colonies, and in the U. S It was formerly borne by the heads of certain royal burghs in Scotland, but has there been long superseded by provost. It occasionally renders its etymological equivalent (F maire) as the title of a similar municipal officer in French towns, though the Fr. word is now more commonly used, similarly, mayor was formerly used occas to designate certain administrative officers in Holland and Switzerland (cf Mayoralty 3, Mayory)

The continued practice of electing mayors in some decayed boroughs (e g Queenborough in Sheppey) which had become mere villages or hamlets is a common matter of jesting allusion in the literature of the 17th c. There are also in various parts of the country instances in which a so-called 'mayor' is or was elected periodically with burlesque ceremonies, of these mock dignitaries the 'Mayor of Garratt', near Wandsworth, is the best-known example.

Meal, obs. form of MAIL sb [2]

-meal, suffix, forming advs. (all obs exc. piecemeal), repr. ME -mele (down to the 14th c sometimes -melum), OE. -mélum. The OE. advs in -mélum are in form the instrumental case plural of compounds of mél MEAL sb.[2], in the sense of 'measure', 'quantity taken at one time', as in cuclérmélum spoonful (as a measure), the instr. pl of which would be cuclérmélum* by spoonfuls The particular compounds of this formation actually recorded in the instr pl., however, do not occur in the other cases, and already in OE. -mélum had come to be a mere suffix with the sense expressed in Latin by -atim, -tim, and in mod.Eng by the repetition of the sb. preceded by by Examples which existed in OE. are dropmélum DROPMEAL, flocmélum FLOCKMEAL, fótmélum FOOTMEAL, héapmélum HEAPMEAL, limmélum LIMBMEAL, scéafmélum sheaf by sheaf, stemmélum turn by turn, alternately, stundmélum STOUNDMEAL, styccemélum bit by bit, gearmélum year by year. The suffix continued to be productive in ME., among the formations dating from that period being cantle-meal, cupmeal, gobbetmeal, littlemeal, parcelmeal, pennymeal, piecemeal, poundmeal, and the Latinisms ravishmeal (Wyclif) 'raptim', table-meal 'tabulatim'. A remarkable survival of the OE inflexion appears in Wyclif's hæpyllmelum (see HIPPLE) To the 16th c. belong fitmeal, inchmeal, jointmeal, lumpmeal; in later Eng the suffix has not been productive, though nonce-words such as pagemeal have occasionally been formed, more or less playfully. A trace of the originally substantival character of the suffix remains in the use of by piecemeal as a synonym of the simple adv. (cf. the obs. by flockmeal, by pennymeal, etc.).

Mean (mīn), a.1 and *adv.*1 Forms: 3 meane, 3-4 mene, 4-5 meen, 5 mean. [App. repr. (with normal loss of prefix) the earlier I-mene, OE. gemǽne = OFris gemêne, OS. gimêni (MLG gemeine, MDu. gemêne, Du gemeen), OHG gimeini (MHG. gemeine, mod.G gemein; Sw, Da gemen from Ger), Goth gamains.—OTeut. ga-main-*, f ga- copulative prefix (synonymous with L. com-) + main-* —pie-Teut. moini-* in L communis (.— com-moini-s*) Common a

The pie-Teut moini* is believed to be a ppl derivative of the root mei-*, moi- (as in L unitāre —moitāri*) to change, whence L. mūnus (—moinos-) reward, gift, and peih (with the notion of change for the worse) OIcut. mainu- wicked, Man a

The primary sense of Teut gamains*, as of L communis, is 'possessed jointly', 'belonging equally to a number of persons' In OE, and in the early stages of the other Teut languages, this was substantially the only sense, but in ME, as in Du and Ger., it underwent a development corresponding to that of Common a, so that it acquired the senses of 'ordinary', 'not exceptionally good', 'inferior'. In English this development was furthered by the fact that the native word coincided in form with the word adopted from OF meien, moien (see Mean a.2) middle, 'middling', which was often used in a disparaging or reproachful sense The uses in branch II below might be referred almost equally well to the native and to the foreign adj., the truth is prob. that they are of mixed ancestry

It is often supposed that the sense-development of the word has been influenced by OE mǽne false, wicked (cogn w mán Man sb.2 and a), but this does not seem possible, as this adj. did not survive into ME., while the moral senses of mean do not appear before the mod.Eng period]

It is possible that the word may have come into Eng. from continental LG For its existence in OE there is no other evidence than the occurrence, in a 12th c MS., of maslesceafe as a spelling of mælsceafa MALSHAVE. The phonetic development is irregular normally the modern form should be masel* (cf. HAZEL [1], for which spellings like hesel, heasle occur in the 15–16th c.). That the dialectal form measle appears in literary English may be due to a mistaken association of this word with MESEL leper; a similar confusion occurred in MHG, where maselsucht (etymologically 'measles') was often used for miselsucht leprosy]
